

Growing Older Gracefully

Most weekends, Edward Clyde, 67, can be found at his Diamond Bar X Ranch near Heber City, where he fishes, ropes calves, hikes, rides horseback and plays tennis. During the week, Mr. Clyde works as the senior and managing partner in a Salt Lake City law firm. Over the years, he has been involved in numerous community service organizations and enjoys traveling and collecting art. "I like people and usually can establish a useful rapport both with the client and his adversary," says Mr. Clyde, whose children and grandchildren number 16. "I'm disciplined and willing to 'pay the price' with hard work."

For 62 of his 76 years, Salt Lake City businessman David Freed has played tennis. He was the 1954 National Senior Champion, the 1960-61 Davis Cup Captain and winner of the 1956 National Senior Doubles. "I'm kind of a health nut," says Mr. Freed, who swims a half-mile every other day in addition to teaching tennis to 50 local youths. The father of three and grandfather of 14, Mr. Freed does not smoke or drink alcohol.
